HANNAH WOODHOUSE - [Term: July 2021 – June 2024] - Hannah Woodhouse (she/her) is an educator and advocate with years of experience in the fields of violence prevention, social justice, sexual health, and gender equity. Though she works with people of all ages, she is especially passionate about talking about these issues with young people and empowering the next generation of leaders through conversation, collaboration, peer education, and advocacy.

Originally from a small town outside of Chicago, Hannah moved to Rhode Island for her bachelor's degree which she obtained from the University of Rhode Island in 2012. While at the university, she coordinated the peer advocacy group on campus as well as the Rhode Island Student Collaborative, which connects college students across the state in violence prevention efforts. She was the first recipient under 25 of the Wild Woman Award issued by the Domestic Resource Center, which recognizes women in Rhode Island who work to prevent interpersonal violence in the state. Additionally, she has advocated on behalf of survivors of interpersonal violence in several capacities, both within the state and on the national level.

For the past six years, she has been engaged in youth development work in Rhode Island, having the opportunity to provide workshops and programming to schools across the state and connect with youth of all ages, backgrounds, and experiences, first at Day One and now at Sojourner House of Rhode Island. She educates youth on topics such as emotional regulation, sexual wellness, violence prevention, healthy relationships, and more. She recently graduated from Boston College with a Master's in Educational Leadership & Social Policy and a Certificate in Social Justice Leadership and plans to pursue a PhD in the future.

Outside of the classrooms and settings she works within, Hannah is a dedicated member of the Rhode Island community and volunteers with several local organizations. She enjoys engaging the creative mind, and is a musician and artist in her free time. She is excited to join the community here at Segue and further advocate for the next generation of leaders.
